Open Source mobile personal data aggregation and exploration

For better and for worse, the web's information swarm has made health information very easy to find for laypeople. Today this is accompanied by an explosion of wearable devices that provide realtime data about a person's health parameters (heart rate, blood pressure, weight, posture, and, soon, insulin and cortisol). All this information is hard to process, being spread among a vast variety of sources and software platforms. Fluxstream aims to centralise this information in order 1) to make it easier for the end-users themselves to comprehend and 2) to support the work of professionals who are able to leverage this information to improve health and well being generally.
